Subject: Intersection of Brewster and Olmstead

Hi Mr. Mark,

My name is Jack Greenspan, and I'm a student at Scarsdale High School. Every day, I walk to school from my house on Cohawney Rd to the high school, and then walk back when the school day ends. And every day, I have to pass through the intersection of Brewster and Olmstead. This intersection is extremely dangerous for students like me who walk to and from school. There are cars trying to go in four different directions, and students trying to walk across the street. The intersection is usually fine during the day, but near the start and end of school, it becomes hectic. All of the upperclassmen who drive to school are driving, parents trying to pick up their kids are coming and going, and school buses also pass through. This makes these intersections extremely dangerous for kids like me. If just one kid or driver aren't on the same page with everyone else, it could make for a potentially dangerous situation. It seems ridiculous that such a busy intersection wouldn't have any type of traffic control. At the very least, the village needs to put in a crosswalk with a "yield for pedestrians" sign, and hopefully you could install traffic lights to stop human error from causing a potentially fatal situation.

Thank you,
Jack Greenspan
